The municipality (town) of Villacastín is located southwest in the province of Segovia, to which it belongs, and bordering with the province of Ávila, with a current population of 1,700 inhabitants.

Villacastín opens its doors and invites you to visit. It is located in a ravine with an area of 109,800 square kilometers. Its altitude hovering around 1,100 meters above sea level makes it one of the highest towns in the Castilla and León region. It serves as a separation point to two distinct settings: the rocky ground, useful for pastures and deep earth for farming crops. These special topographical conditions form a binomial between cattle raising and agriculture which gives Villacastín its very own hue.

The municipality (town) is watered, among others, by the rivers: Cardeña, Alameda and Santa Cecilia and the streams Lavadero of Aceña and San Bartolomé. Connections with the rest of the province and surrounding provinces can be done by taking the N-VI Madrid-La Coruña, the N-110 from Ávila to Segovia, the A-6 Villalba to Adanero and AP-51 linking Villacastín with Ávila. The town is 30 km from Ávila City Center; 36 km from Segovia City Center and 74 km from Madrid Capitol. Tradition and dynamism are united in this crossroad of roads.

The origin of its population still has not been defined, but as a stopping place on the route heading northeast, it once franked the Sierra of Guadarrama. Presumably it would have been populated from the beginning of time.

A roman road runs not far from the town therefore it has been attributed with Roman descend. It is said that in one of his journeys with his troops a general named Castán built a recreation villa for him and his men which led to the beginning of construction of other buildings in the area.

Others give the version of "Villa of the Castles" latching on to the sight of four castles represented in the town shield, castles of which nothing remains today.

La Matilla, Navalpino, Amanuel, Quejibar, La Fresneda among others are names of other villages in the past, now territory, that have given shape to the current Villacastín.

In the early and late Middle Ages the village develops and grows due to its privileged location. It establishes itself as a crossroad of roads and streams causing the expansion of livestock and farming industries. This period ends at the end of the XVI century when the number of its inhabitants begins to decline.

Those were the times in the reign Felipe IV, the monarch who finds himself in economic hardship and in order to afford the expenses of the Crown and cost of making coffins for the Royal Family implements the notion of servitude.

Using his power and privilege on September 2, 1626 a deed to exempt and separate Villacastín from the jurisdiction of Segovia is granted making Villacastín an independent town.

After multiple bureaucratic procedures and forming a new standard the King confirms the title of Town in a document dated March 26, 1627, as represented on the town shield. From this date, Villacastín begins journey loaded goodwill towards the future, going "from village to a free and organized Town".

Overtime, Villacastín has consolidated itself as a town that is strategically located where many roads meet. Due to this the service sector and natural product transformation industry is currently growing; industries which include the exploitation of granite, meat products, livestock, flourishing network services and hostelry.

The tourism potential of Villacastín is not only limited to the hunting and culinary aspects. In fact, it expands to the friendliness and welcoming capacity of its citizens to visitors, in its artistic monuments and beautiful streets, in short, it is a place where any visitor can feel comfortable and integrated, even if it's for a few hours, one can enjoy the peace and quiet that emanates from a Castilian town.

What to see?

Guildhall

Located in the main square this building sits over thirteen arches which stand at unequal heights due to the declining soil. Since 1575 these arches support the Town Hall and on that side of the square you can see porches of unique beauty. At the top you will see four town shields.

Our Lady of Angels Monastery

Work on the convent began in 1621 under the auspices of Juan de Pedraza and the Counts of Molina Herrera and construction took eight years to complete. The monastery has been occupied by Franciscan Clarisse nuns since December 4, 1632 until today. The church of this convent is chaired by a Renaissance altarpiece that contains a canvas of Santa Clara and San Francisco.

Church Parish

Two illustrious XVI century people are traditionally associated with the construction and design of the temple: Rodrigo Gil de Hontañón gave shape to both auditoriums and domes and Fray Antón of Villacastín, a native of this land and a man highly trusted by Felipe II, to give a certain Herrera Style to the exterior of the building. The building was designed in an Herrera Style on the outside and Gothic on the inside.

It has three buildings separated by slender columns supporting ribbed vaults. It has Renaissance Style altarpieces and pictorial paintings. The main altarpiece was traced by Jesuit Andrés Ruiz in 1589.

It looks like triptych, not too open, and it consists of four rows with fluted columns.

In the middle of the aisles of the "Catedral de la Sierra"

as the Marquis de Lozoya called the church of Villacastín are altarpieces dedicated to the Christ on the cross slope and The Sacred Heart.

The last two altarpieces are to the right and left respectively and are of Our Lady of Carmen while the altar is of San Francisco. The pulpit is from the XVI century. The temple was declared a National Monument on July 8, 1944.

Our Lady Carrascal Shrine

In Villacastín the devotion of the townspeople revolves around two patrons who are San Sebastián Martyr and the Virgin of Carrascal. The shrine of Our Lady of Carrascal is built on a hillside crowned by large rocks. The path leading to it is still wild and lined with trees. It is shaped like a bottle: A square body up to the head then shaped like a space capsule and finally a long rectangle. Several transformations have modernized the shrine throughout the years. The day of the Ascension in the month of May is a very important holiday.

Charity Shrine

The shrine of the Virgin of Charity was completed in 1751 in the plot of a house and sold in the year 1749 by the chaplaincy of Juan Pérez de Córdoba. Engraved on the lintel one can see "Our Lady of Charity shrine 1751." The shrine contains a polychrome Baroque Style altarpiece.

Saint Christ of the Valley Shrine

Formally known as Corpus Christi shrine. This shrine is a consecrated chapel of the Divide Crucified. There is no proof of the altarpieces it had but the largest contained a crucifix. Due to this and its location the shrine came to be called Saint Christ of the Valley shrine perhaps in the XVII century.

Shrine of Santa Vera Cruz

This hermitage is also devoted to the Divine Crucified. The main focal point of the chapel is at the front of the room and to the sides there are two altarpieces dedicated to San Juan and Our Lady. It seems that there was never sacristy, but there was a porch, which has six brackets still embedded on the wall. The buttresses and campanile are relatively new and appear to be of our days. About twelve meters ahead of the gable there is a stone cross as if it were an ordeal.

Shrine of the Slaves

Diego Hernández is responsible of the construction of the building. It is a rectangular building with a sacristy at the front and a portal at the back. It consists of a baroque altarpiece which displays a canvas between the doors.

Monument to the stork

Villacastín is the only municipality in Spain who has dedicated a monument to this friendly and popular animal. Located on the facade of the church of San Sebastián which gives sight to the main road, one will find the construction tribute to the Stork. It is made out of wrought iron and rests the in a granite monolith base.
